CASES BY COUNTY · CURRENT PERIOD

OVERVIEW

Kenya's femicide crisis remains at critical elevation with a Misogyny Index holding steady at 47/100—a plateau that masks escalating real-world violence. Zero new cases formally recorded this fortnight obscures a darker truth: at least 4 documented murders (Alice Rianga, Diana Cherono, the Embakasi victim, and others) collapsed into a two-week window, with international media (BBC, Al

MISOGYNY OF THE DAY · PATTERN

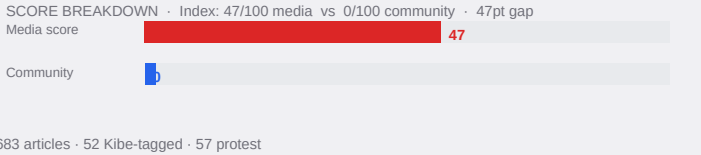

The Misogyny of the Day posts reveal a three-stage pipeline: (1) Victim erasure through blame-shifting (Embakasi: "what's the background"), (2) Patriarchal control narratives (Diana Cherono: policing women's sexuality to prevent death), and (3) Overt normalization of abuse (Mombasa march: sexualizing child rape). These aren't isolated trolls—they're ideological statements from verified or semi-verified accounts (political scientist, human rights activist credentials claimed) that

TECH-FACILITATED VIOLENCE

Nine cases flagged as tech-facilitated this period, concentrated on X and Facebook as primary amplification channels for victim-blame narratives and perpetrator apologia. Meta and X's content moderation systems failed to suppress or flag statements that sexualize murdered women, blame victims for their deaths, or normalize child sexual

MISOGYNY INDEX · ANALYSIS

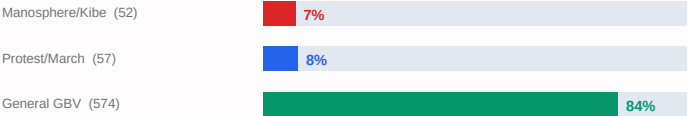

The index remains frozen at 47, driven entirely by news media coverage (score: 47) with zero social media engagement recorded—a critical gap in our intelligence architecture. Broadcast and print outlets are leading the narrative (BBC, Al Jazeera, The Star all scoring 9/10 alarm severity), but the absence of social platform scoring suggests either platform suppression of misogynist content or a failure in our scanner to capture the visceral hatred erupting in real time. This news-to-community disconnect means policymakers see the crisis through international headlines while missing the inflamma

THE INSIGHT

Kenya's femicide epidemic is no longer a criminal justice problem—it is a communication infrastructure problem. Over 1,000 women killed in a decade, four murders in two weeks, and hundreds marching for safety, yet our Misogyny Index captures zero social platform engagement and misses the counter-mobilization occurring in real time. International media (BBC, Al Jazeera) are holding up a mirror Kenya's own platforms refuse to clean: X and Facebook are repositories of victim-blame theology, perpetrator apologia, and normalization scripts that precede and enable murder. The stasis in our index scores masks acceleration in real violence. Until we measure what communities actually say when women die—until we link online misogyny to offline killing and hold platforms accountable for amplification—we are documenting a crisis we cannot stop. The protests show Kenyans know this. The question is whether the state and the platforms do.
