CASES BY COUNTY · CURRENT PERIOD

OVERVIEW

Kenya's misogyny index holds steady at 49/100—a marginal 2-point decline masking an active femicide crisis. Four documented murders in two weeks (Alice Rianga, Diana Cheronon, and two additional victims) drove international media attention and triggered mass mobilisation. The stability of the index reflects a dangerous normalization: femicide is now the baseline conversation, not the shock.

MISOGYNY OF THE DAY · PATTERN

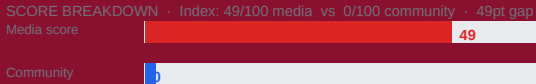

The Misogyny of the Day posts reveal a three-phase pipeline: (1) deflection (blaming "background" and systems rather than perpetrators), (2) victim-erasure (framing women's sexuality as causative of murder), and (3) normalization through authority (credentialed accounts reframing gender equality as emasculation). Posts cluster on X and Facebook during funerals and protests, suggesting coordinated counter-mobilisation against feminist organizing.

TECH-FACILITATED VIOLENCE

Eight tech-facilitated cases recorded this period (social media and "online platforms" broadly). Boyfriend-perpetrated femicides leverage messaging apps (WhatsApp, Facebook Messenger) for isolation and control prior to murder; post-incident, the same platforms become stages for victim-blaming and suspect defense. No platform data-share with law

MISOGYNY INDEX · ANALYSIS

The index flatlined at 49 (down from 51), entirely driven by news media coverage (score: 49); social media sentiment registered 0, indicating either platform suppression or a digital silence that contradicts street-level outrage. This split suggests platforms are either blocking misogynist content reactively or failing to capture the full ecosystem of abuse. The decline is illusory—it reflects reporting cycles, not reduced hostility.

THE INSIGHT

Kenya is experiencing a **visible femicide crisis with an invisible online infrastructure supporting it**. Four murders in 14 days triggered international headlines and mass protest—yet the misogyny index barely moved because online abuse has become the ambient temperature of discourse, not a deviation from it. The data reveals a critical disconnect: international media (BBC, The Star) names femicide a **system**, while social platforms (X, Facebook) fragment it into individual cases, enabling users with credibility markers to reframe each murder as an isolated moral failure of the victim rather than a pattern of perpetrator impunity. The posts from @zacharyon085 and unnamed Facebook accounts show how misogynists are learning to speak the language of complexity ("background," "integrity") to obscure accountability
